FANATICAL CANUOKS.

The Horrible Details of the Small-Pox Scourge in Montreal.

City in Which the Plague is Rampant—Race Prejudices at a White Heat—The Post-Dispatch Special Correspondent's Inspection of the Slums of the French Quarter—The Horrors of the Pest House of St. Roch.

The Post-Dispatch's special correspondent recently commissioned to investigate the situation, gave the following horrible story of the small-pox scourge in Montreal:

Montreal, October 4.—If old Jacques Cartier, the discoverer of the island of Montreal, could come back to the city and look down on his big city, from the heights of the royal mountain, the scene which he would behold would be a new spectacle. In the old pre-vaccination days in which he lived, the shabby pestilence used to sweep off so many low creatures to attract such attention by ancient Jacques, but the bold warrior would now see before him a city laid low with shame, grief and suffering; a city in which the plague is rampant; a city in which the pestilence is a white heat, requiring only a strong breath to blow the latent fire to a fierce blaze. When the train emerges from the mile or more of blighted land, the sunlit of the city, there may be seen, on the right, a brown shanty located on the low ground immediately at the base of the cleared way. On the front of the small dwelling, a sign is visible, in bold, ominous letters, "Pest House." The sign is a square of yellow paper, nearly covered with black ink, but the block of which the placard was printed is cut away so as to show the yellow ground of the material. bright, blue-eyed little girl with whom he played who said that she had not been vaccinated as far as the moment of commiseration. One of the remaining ones said that he took part in the demonstration last Monday night against the City Hall and the office of the Morning Herald. He assured the writer that the objectionable placard would not remain over night.

"If they force us to be vaccinated by vaccination we will turn the city. A has made a grand. The above is an example of the anti-vaccination sentiment and of the absence of any system of isolation of the sick and the infected houses. On the large road was a little sufferer in the last stage of the disease. The entire face was a solid mass of pustulation and the eyes were closed. The secondary fever was at its height and the wretched object of humanity breathed short in gasping efforts in its profound delirium. The stage of apathy had arrived and if the delirium was passed away in the course of the night, the awakening consciousness would be but an indifference to all earthly surroundings. The child had but a few hours to live. From head to foot the poor little body was a mass of field corruption; and, oh, the deadly sickness of the small that loaded the close air of the den! On one of the small beds was another child, convalescent, but very weak from a severe attack. A child of 4, the sister of the two sick children, was playing about the floor of the living room. Her face was free from the signs of disease, and an examination revealed the fact that both her arms were free from the marks of vaccination.

"Why in the name of all that is good, don't you have that child vaccinated?" exclaimed the Post-Dispatch's representative.

"Ah, non, son," said the mother, and she matched up the little one in an indignant fear that the objectionable virus of small-pox might be surreptitiously introduced beneath the guise of her offspring. Here was a bad state of affairs.

"Have the Board of Health been around?"

"Yes, some one came and put up a notice."

"What pulled it down?"

"Ah, je ne sais pas," replied the laundress with a shrug of her broad shoulders. She probably told the doctor the placard with her own hands, but was too shrewd to admit as much.

"Oh, yes; but I have to do the washing for Madame's lodgers."

"You don't mean to say that you are washing the clothes of an outside family?"

"Oui, oui, certainement."

Is it any wonder that the epidemic is rapidly increasing in Montreal, when such awful ignorance prevails? The writer had one unpleasant experience in a house near St. Ignace street, St. Ignace's name has been affixed to one of the vilest streets in Montreal. It is a veritable shanty, and the denizens of the mean, filthy tenements fronting the abominable roadway, wide enough for only one carriage, are among the notorious "louches" of the Canadian metropolis. Entering a miserable den which bore no placard, an atrocious smell and the general dirt of the apartment were the all-pervading characteristics. In an adjoining room there was a sick person, but whether man, woman or child the writer cannot say. A gaunt woman, with a headscarf, was seated around her head, uttered a cry of fear when she caught sight of the stranger. A torrent of French patois poured from her lips and it required but a moment to understand that the virago was a mad woman. The Post-Dispatch's representative, a local official. Explanations and expostulations were of no avail. The creature ran to the back door and, returning with a murderous look, she fairly screamed with fury and pointed toward the front entrance. The correspondent drove in and stopped in front of the door. Several boys whose faces were free from fresh marks were staring with a boy marked with fresh marks. A dead body was being transported from the building to the ramshackle shanty used as a dead-house. Piles of infected linen were dumped apparently from the upper windows of the ground beneath. The building is capable of accommodation for a number of patients. It is the sanitary rules for the construction of hospitals and making proper allowances for the requisite supply of fresh air are followed. But when the writer was shown the awful den there were nearly 100 people crowded into the place. The writer was told that the Board of Health, who are in the rear of St. Roch's grounds, no more than 100 yards from the building, drive to the mountains on sleighs along the side of a hill. Being higher than the grounds of the pest house, the carriage-way permits of a bird's-eye view of the foul premises. The writer saw many equipages with ladies and little children on the seats, and servants in livery on the boxes, driving slowly by within twenty feet of a half dozen convalescents. Another den which is frequently regarding the number of cases of variola in the city and suburbs. The Board of Health, dealing in glittering generalities, jointly set down the number at from one thousand five hundred to two thousand. The writer, who does not believe in the truth by one-half, when a comparative stranger can go on infected streets and find ten more cases than the Board of Health would tell the Kingdom of Denmark. There are over 4,000 cases of the disease to-day. The only interesting point out of a mass of desultory generalities at a health meeting was a story told by a member of a woman in the French quarter. The official placard posted a yellow and black sign, no notice on the front of her house, then being a case within. As soon as the sign went away, she promptly posted a white sheet with a black cross, and marked it with a sign "Chambre à louer," which, being anglicized, means "room to rent." The stagnation of business in Montreal is going to continue, and the winter will be a very hard one, and many of the mob of Montreal will be forced to seek refuge in the city and suburbs. All that can be done is to save for the State or elsewhere, and they will carry with them the seeds of a dreadful pestilence. There is a great deal of talk about the daily going through with it, at the Board of Health's Station, whence all trains for Boston and New York depart. A few fresh fruits of a solution of carbolic acid are given over the cars, and that is all. The end of the Montreal epidemic depends on the energy played and on the courage evinced by the citizens. At present business is at a comparative standstill, the theaters are closed, friends are looking at one another with a general sense of dread, and a turbulent and ignorant population are bent on their own destruction. Come what may, the small-pox will not take its departure until spring.

It is to be hoped that out of the present trouble there will be accomplished some preventive and restrictive measures so that future recurrence of the dread disease in the epidemic form.

Read it! Consider it! Beat it in Mind and You Can Save Money!

A great deal of humbug and imposition is daily practised in large cities, especially upon strangers, by two classes of merchants—one who lure the unsophisticated stranger into their dens and there bulldoze him into buying rubbish, making him pay the price of fine goods. The other, who consider themselves "Jay Goulds and Vanderbilts," and think that the public MUST buy goods in their establishment, no matter how exorbitant the prices are. Now, it will be money in the pocket of each stranger who visits our city during Fair week to call, examine our stock, see our prices and convince himself that he can save at least 25 per cent on all goods that he may purchase of the

THE CIVIL COURTS.

Opening of the October Term Under the Dome.

Scenes of Activity in the Various Court-Rooms—The Arrangements for Fair Week—Belligerent Partners Before the Court—Examination of Legal Students—Doctor McLean's Mining Investment.

There was renewed activity at the Court House to-day and a full attendance of the bar for the opening of the October term. The Circuit Judges occupied their respective benches during the morning hearing motions, etc. All divisions of the court will be adjourned after tomorrow evening until next Monday morning. An order issued this morning to the effect that the time for pleading is extended to Tuesday, October 10. The first default day is Wednesday, October 14.

Court of Appeals.

The Court of Appeals met this morning, Judges Lewis, Bonham and Seymour. D. Thompson was the bench for the formal opening of the October term. The hearing of cases will commence on Tuesday, October 13, and the Court, after disposing of a few preliminary matters, adjourned until Friday, October 16. George H. Boughton was enrolled a member of the bar on motion of Leonard B. Wilson.

Applicants for the Bar.

The Circuit Judges met in general term shortly before noon to-day to examine the following candidates for admission to the bar: D. W. Thompson, Harmon J. Bliss, Arthur R. Hartman, George Fahland, Wm. J. Dore, George J. Kilgus, J. W. Upper and Albert B. Borgen.

The Smyth-O'Brien Imbroglio.

The Smyth-O'Brien litigation, involving a dissolution of partnership and appointment of a receiver, was before Judge Barclay this morning in Circuit Court No. 3. The partners were present in court, looking none the worse for a week's seclusion, and the case was heard by Judge Barclay.

Dr. McLean's Mining Investment.

Dr. McLean has failed to answer in the Circuit Court to the suit of Frank H. Woodworth and others. The case was set for trial in December, 1885, but was delayed by the representations of the plaintiffs to invest $40,000 for the mining of a shaft at the Monte Jean mine, in Grant County, New Mexico. The doctor was told that gold and silver could be brought to the surface in enormous quantities, but he found it no bonanza. In fact, he alleges that the mine is no bonanza, and the doctor's counter claim for $40,000 damages on the ground of misrepresentation.
